Written advocacy is a fundamental aspect of legal practice, complementing oral advocacy in presenting a persuasive and well-reasoned case. A clear, persuasive and structured presentation of legal arguments serves as a permanent record that guides judicial reasoning and enhances the efficiency of proceedings.

This course requires participants to submit their written work to the trainers two weeks before the course, based on case studies provided in advance. The course will commence with presentations on effective written advocacy from the perspectives of a judge and an advocate.

It will then be followed by personalised and comprehensive reviews of the written work submitted, conducted by experienced advocates and judges. Participants will then be given the opportunity to rework their written submissions based on the feedback given and deliver them to the trainers for a further review on the subsequent week.

The training utilised in this course follows closely the training method adopted for the advocacy training courses organised by the Committee and will cover aspects the trainers consider helpful in improving the written advocacy of each advocate.
